SALZBURG OUTREACH

After three evenings of baking, assembling a care package for Danny, and picking up a couple friends, we were off to the Calvary Chapel Outreach located at the famous Salzburg Christmas Market. As Danny mixed his secret formula into the Christmas tea, we formed an assembly line and packaged the goodies. There was a lot of love and laughter on the job that night as we shared our lives with one another.

The next day, about 15 youth and their leaders from another Calvary Chapel church joined us. It was a bright but cold day as we set up the stand and went to work. Everyone was involved and having a good time. We did it all over again that night, and after dinner gathered to share our experiences. Here are a couple of memorable quotes.

"How can you believe in a God who slaughters thousands of people in the Old Testament?" one lady barked, intimidating the sweet 13 year old boy. "I don't know, you ought to try reading the New Testament!" was his innocent reply.

One couple refused a track saying, "No thank you, we are not religious." The boy responded, "We are not religious either; religion starts wars. We are about peace."

Several young boys came wearing only T-shirts that day, because it was so sunny. They said, "We tried not to take any money for the tea and cookies!" Evidently someone thought they were too poor to own jackets.

One lady commented how wonderful everything was, and she was especially impressed that everything was free. "Nothing in Salzburg is free!" she said.

Many of the ladies recognized how much effort went into making the cookies and were quite open to hear the Gospel and our reason for having the tea stand.

We went to a great church service the next day and spent time getting to know people before heading home. Everyone had fun participating, and we are looking forward to doing it again.
